Expertise vs. Opinion

A running joke from a childhood friend goes something like this—Do you know what an expert is? Answer: A drip under pressure—a has-been. Not terribly funny but easy to imagine. It's not unusual for some to claim expertise in a certain field when they have only a limited understanding that would indicate true mastery. Similar to what Samuel Clemens—or was it Abraham Lincoln—writes: "It's better to remain silent and be thought a fool than to speak and remove all doubt." In the age of multi-media forums, it's evident to many critical thinkers that there are more foolish people with ill informed opinions ready to express their expert view than there are those that keep up with well-informed experts.

By writing this article, I make no claim to expertise though as you might imagine I tend toward the kind of critical thinking that employs scholastic research, a clear methodology or approach to a particular topic, and an examination of unknowns regarding the matter that often keeps experts wondering about what is objectively and subjectively true. (Continued on page 5...)

Experiencia frente a Opinión

Un chiste corriente de un amigo de la infancia dice algo como esto: ¿Sabes lo que es un experto? Respuesta: Un goteo bajo presión, alguien del pasado. No es muy divertido, pero es fácil de imaginar. No es inusual que algunos afirmen tener experiencia en un campo determinado cuando solo tienen un conocimiento limitado que indicaría un verdadero conocimiento. Similar a lo que escribe Samuel Clemens, o fue Abraham Lincoln: "Es mejor permanecer en silencio y ser considerado un tonto que hablar y eliminar toda duda". En la era de multimedia, es evidente para muchos pensadores críticos que hay más personas tontas con opiniones mal informadas listas para expresar su punto de vista experto que aquellas que se mantienen al día con expertos bien informados.

Al escribir este artículo, no pretendo tener experiencia, aunque, como se puede imaginar, tiendo hacia el tipo de pensamiento crítico que emplea la investigación escolástica, una metodología o enfoque claro para un tema en particular y un examen de las incógnitas sobre el tema que a menudo se mantiene por expertos que se preguntan que es objetiva y subjetivamente cierto. (Pastor's Notes Continued from page 1)

As one of our professors suggested, "Adolf Hitler was sincere, Jack the Ripper was enthusiastic, and St. Thomas Aquinas was competent. Your competency will save the people of God from your enthusiasm and sincerity." It's difficult to keep this in mind when so many are rewarded for opinions predicated on enthusiasm and sincerity but lack or fail to value competency as a measure of careful evaluation.

This is nothing new though it seems to be proliferating at a rate that surpasses previous generations largely due to the misinformation that abounds and the multiple ways that it is conveyed. It may also be due to the mistrust of institutions that have traditionally produced specialists in a given field of knowledge. It's true that there are some naturally brilliant people that are capable of evaluating what is patently true or false, and they would be less likely to express an opinion that was misinformed, but it just seems like there are many more people that state opinions they believe are true and feel strongly about what they believe but have only their egos—not evidence—at stake.

Humility—not hubris—is the answer. It's better for one to be humble than to be humiliated. It's a good idea to listen to experts since many of them have knowledge and experience that most of us do not. It requires any of us to be more careful about what we claim to know and to be honest about things we don't but would like to learn. This is the basis for all study and what allows some people to be qualified as experts.

Como sugirió uno de nuestros profesores, "Adolf Hitler era sincero, Jack the Ripper estaba entusiasmado y Santo Tomás de Aquino era competente. Su habilidad salvará al pueblo de Dios de su entusiasmo y sinceridad". Es difícil tener esto en cuenta cuando tantos son recompensados por opiniones basadas en el entusiasmo y la sinceridad, pero carecen o no valoran la competencia como una medida de evaluación cuidadosa.

Esto no es nada nuevo, aunque parece estar proliferando a un ritmo que supera a las generaciones anteriores en gran parte debido a la desinformación que abunda y las múltiples formas en que se transmite. También puede deberse a la desconfianza de las instituciones que tradicionalmente han producido especialistas en un determinado campo del conocimiento. Es cierto que hay algunas personas naturalmente brillantes que son capaces de evaluar lo que es evidentemente verdadero o falso, y es menos probable que expresen una opinión mal informada, pero parece que hay muchas más personas que expresan opiniones que creen son verdaderas y sienten fuertemente acerca de lo que creen, pero sólo tienen su ego, no la evidencia, en juego.

La humildad, no la arrogancia, es la respuesta. Es mejor para uno ser humilde que ser humillado. Es una buena idea escuchar a los expertos, ya que muchos de ellos tienen conocimientos y experiencia que la mayoría de nosotros no. Requiere que cualquiera de nosotros tenga más cuidado con lo que afirmamos saber y que seamos honestos sobre las cosas que no sabemos pero que nos gustaría aprender. Esta es la base de todo estudio y lo que permite que algunas personas se califiquen como expertos.

Confessions Confesiones

Confessions are Saturday from 3:30 – 5pm. When preparing for the Sacrament of Reconciliation, please be considerate to those waiting with you when it's your turn to confess your sins to a priest by keeping it brief, acknowledging true contrition, and receiving penance and absolution. If you need more than the period of confession allows on Saturday, you may decide to meet with one of the parish priests at a less pressing time during the week. Please be mindful of others who may be excluded from the Sacrament of Reconciliation by an otherwise lengthy confession.

Ofrecemos confesiones todos los sábados de 3:30 pm a 5:00 pm. Cuando se prepare para el Sacramento de la

Reconciliación, sea consciente de los que esperan con usted cuando sea su turno de confesarse con un sacerdote, manteniendo su confesión breve, reconociendo la verdadera contrición y recibiendo penitencia y absolución. Si necesita más de lo que permite el período de confesión el sábado, puede reunirse con uno de los sacerdotes en un momento menos urgente durante la semana. Tome en cuenta a los demás que pueden ser excluidos del Sacramento de la Reconciliación por motivo de una confesión larga.
